NINA BALATKA:

THE STORY OF A MAIDEN OF PRAGUE

CHAPTER XII.—(Continued.)

Souchev was seated at the table in the kitchen almost as soon as he had entered the house in the Windberg-gasse, and found his plate full before him. Lotta had felt that there was no need of the delicacy of compliment in feeding a man who was so undoubtedly hungry, and she had therefore bade him at once fall to, "A hearty meal is a thing you are not used to," she had said, "and it will do your old bones a deal of good." The address was not complimentary, especially as coming from a lady in regard to whom he entertained tender feelings; but Souchev forgave the something of coarse familiarity which the words displayed, and, seating himself on the stool before the victuals gave play to the feelings of the moment. "There's no one to measure what's left of the sausage," said Lotta, instigating him to new feats.

"Ain't there now?" said Souchev, responding to the sound of the trumpet. "I always thought she had the devil's own eye in looking after what was used in the kitchen."

"The devil himself winks sometimes," said Lotta, cutting another half-inch off from the unconsumed fragment, and picking the skin from the meat with her own fair fingers. Hitherto Souchev had been regardless of any such niceness in his eating, the skin having gone with the rest; but now he thought that the absence of the outside covering, and the touch of Lotta's fingers were grateful to his appetite.

"Souchev," said Lotta, when he had altogether done and had turned his stool round to the kitchen fire, "where do you think Nina would go if she were to marry—a Jew?" There was an abrupt solemnity in the manner of the question which at first baffled the man, whose breath was heavy with the comfortable repletion which had been bestowed upon him.

"Where would she go to?" he said, repeating Lotta's words. "Yes, Souchev, where would she go to? Where would be her eternal home? What would become of her soul? Do you know that not a priest in Prague would give her absolution, though she were on her dying bed? Oh, holy Mary, it's a terrible thing to think of! It's bad enough for the old man and he to be there day after day without a morsel to eat; and I suppose if it were not for Anton Trendelsohn it would be bad enough with them—"

"Not a golden, then, has Nina ever taken from Anton Trendelsohn—nor the value of a golden, as far as I can judge between them."

"What matters that, Souchev? Is she not engaged to him as his wife? Can anything in the world be so dreadful? Don't you know that she'll be—dashed for ever and ever?" Lotta as she uttered the terrible words, brought her face close to Souchev's, looking into his eyes with a fierce glare. Souchev shook his head sorrowfully, owing thereby that his knowledge in the matter of religion did not go to the point indicated by Lotta Luxa. "And wouldn't anything, then, be a good deed that would prevent that?"

"It's the priest that should do it among them."

"But the priests are not the men they used to be, Souchev. And it is not exactly their fault neither. There are so many folks about in these days who care nothing who goes to glory and who does not, and they are too many for the priests."

"If the priests can't fight their own battles, I can't fight it for them," said Souchev.

"But for the old family, Souchev, that you have known so long! Look here; you and I between us can prevent it."

"And how is it to be done?"

"Ah! that's the question. If I felt that I was talking to a real Christian that had a care for the poor girl's soul, I would tell you in a moment."

"So I am; only her soul isn't my business."

"Then I cannot tell you this, I can't do it unless you acknowledge that her welfare as a Christian is the business of us all. Fancy, Souchev, your mistress married to a Jew."

"For the matter of that, he isn't so bad neither."

"But, Souchev, she will never fall out with him. We must contrive that he shall quarrel with her. If she had a thing about her that he did not want her to have, couldn't you contrive that he should know it?"

"What sort of a thing? Do you mean another lover, like?"

"No, you gander. If there was anything of that sort I could manage it myself. But if she had a thing locked up—away from him, couldn't you manage to show it to him? He's very generous in rewarding, you know."

"I don't want to have anything to do with it," said Souchev, getting up from his stool, and preparing to take his departure. Though he had been so keen after the sausage, he was above taking a bribe in such a matter as this.

"Stop, Souchev, stop. I didn't think that I would ever have to ask anything from you in vain."

Then she put her face very close to his, so that her lips touched his ear, and she laid her hand heavily upon his arm, and she was very confidential. Souchev listened to the whisper till his face grew longer and longer. "Tis for her soul," said Lotta—"for her poor soul's sake. When you can save her by raising your hand, would you let her be damned for ever?"

But she could exact no promise from Souchev except that he would keep faith with her, and that he would consider deeply the proposal made to him. Then there was a tender farewell between them, and Souchev returned to the Kleinseite.

CHAPTER XIII.

For two days after this Nina heard nothing from the Jews' quarter, and in her terrible distress her heart almost became softened towards the man who had so deeply offended her. She began to tell herself, in the weariness of her sorrow, that men were different from women, and, of their nature, more suspicious; that no woman had a right to expect every virtue in her lover, and that no woman had less of such a right than she herself, who had so little to give in return for all that Anton proposed to bestow upon her. She began to think that she could forgive him, even for his suspicion, if he would only come to be forgiven. But he came not, and it was only too plain to her that she could not be the first to go to him after what had passed between them.

And then there fell another crushing sorrow upon her. Her father was ill—so ill that he was like to die. The doctor came to him—some son of Galen who had known the merchant in his prosperity—and, with kind assurances, told Nina that her father, though he could pay nothing, should have whatever assistance medical attention could give him; but he said, at the same time, that medical attention could give no aid that would be of permanent service. The light had burned down in the socket, and must go out. The doctor took Nina by the hand, and put his own hand upon her soft tresses, and spoke kind words to console her. And then he said that the sick man ought to take a few glasses of wine every day; and as he was going away, turned back again, and promised to send the wine from his own house. Nina thanked him, and plucked up something of her old spirit during his presence, and spoke to him as though she had no other care than that of her father's health; but as the doctor was gone she thought again of her lover. That her father should die was a great grief. But when she should be alone in the old house, with the corpse lying on the bed, would Anton Trendelsohn come to her then?

He did not come to her now, though he knew of her father's illness. She sent Souchev to the Jews' quarter to tell the sad news—not to him, but to old Trendelsohn. "For the sake of the property it is right he should know," Nina said to herself, excusing to herself on this plea her weakness in sending any message to the house of Anton Trendelsohn till he should have come and asked her pardon. But even after this he came not. She listened to every footstep that entered the courtyard. She could not keep herself from going to the window, and from looking into the square. Surely now, in her deep sorrow, in her solitude, he would come to her. He would come and say one word, that he did trust her, and that he would trust her! But no, he came not at all; and the hours of the day and the night followed slowly and surely upon each other, as she sat by her father's bed watching the last quiver of the light in the socket.

But though Trendelsohn did not come himself, there came to her a messenger from his house—a messenger from Trendelsohn's house, but not a messenger from Anton Trendelsohn. "Here is a girl messenger from the Jew—Jew," said Souchev, whispering into her ear as she sat at her father's bedside; "one of themselves. Shall I tell her to go away, because he is so ill?" And Souchev pointed to his master's head on the pillow. "She has got a basket, but she can leave that."

Nina, however, was by no means inclined to send the Jewess away, rightly guessing that the stranger was her friend Ruth. "Stop here, Souchev, and I will go to her," Nina said. "Do not leave him till I return. I will not be long." She would not have let a dog go without a word that had come from Anton's house or from Anton's presence. Perhaps he had written to her. If there were but a line to say, "Bless me; I was wrong; everything might yet be right. But Ruth Jacoby was the bearer of no note from Anton, nor indeed had she come on her present message with her uncle's knowledge. She had put a heavy basket on the table, and, running forward, took Nina by the hands, and kissed her.

"We have been so sorry all of us, to hear of your father's illness," said Ruth. "Father is very ill," said Nina. "He is dying."

"Nay, Nina, it may be that he is not dying. Life and death both are in the hands of God."

"Yes; it is in God's hands of course; but the doctor says that he will die."

"The doctors have no right to speak in that way," said Ruth, "for how can they know God's pleasure? It may be that he will recover."

"Yes; it may be," said Nina. "It is good of you to come to me, Ruth. I am so glad you have come. Have you any—any—message?"

If he would only ask to be forgiven through Ruth, or even if he had sent a word that might be taken to show that he wished to be forgiven, it should suffice.

"I have—brought—a few things in a basket," said Ruth, almost apologetically.

Then Nina lifted the basket. "You did not surely carry this through the streets?"

"I had Shadrach, our boy, with me. He carried it. It is not from me, exactly; though I have been so glad to come with it."

"And who sent it?" said Nina, quickly, with her fingers trembling on its lid. If Anton had thought to send anything to her, that anything should suffice.

"It was Rebecca Loth who had thought of it, and who asked me to come," said Ruth.

Then Nina drew back her fingers as though they were burned, and walked away from the table with quick angry steps. "Why should Rebecca Loth send anything to me?" she said.

"What is there in the basket?" It is at the top. But she has asked me to say? Why should she say anything to me?"

"Nay, Nina; she is very good, and she loves you."

"I do not want her love."

"I am to say to you that she has heard of your distress, and she hopes that a girl like you will let a girl like her do what she can to comfort you."

"She cannot comfort me!"

"She bade me say that if she were ill, or in sorrow, there is no hand from which you would so gladly take comfort as from yours;—for the sake, she said, of a mutual friend."

"I have no—friend," said Nina.

"Oh, Nina, am not I your friend? Do not I love you?"

"I do not know. If you do love me now, you must cease to love me. You are a Jewess and I am a Christian, and we must live apart. You, at least, must live. I wish you would tell the boy that he may take back the basket."

"There are things in it for your father, Nina; and, Nina, surely you will read Rebecca's note?"

Then Ruth went to the basket, and from the top she took out Rebecca's letter, and gave it to Nina, and Nina read it. It was as follows: "I shall always regard you as very dear to me, because our hearts have been turned in the same way. It may not be perhaps that we shall know each other much at first; but I hope the days may come when we shall be much older than we are now, and that then we may meet and be able to talk of what has passed without pain. I do not know why a Jewess and a Christian woman should not be friends."

"I have sent a few things which may perhaps be of comfort to your father. In pity to me do not refuse them. They are such as one woman should send to another. And I have added a little trifle for your own use. At the present moment you are poor as to money, though so rich in the gifts which make men love. On my knees before you I ask you to accept from me what I send, and to think of me as one who would serve you in more things if it were possible. Yours, if you will let me, affectionately, REBECCA."

"I see when I look at them that the shoes will be too big."

She stood for a while apart from Ruth, with the open note in her hand, thinking whether or no she would accept the gifts which had been sent. The words which Rebecca had written had softened her heart, especially those in which the Jewess had spoken openly to her of her poverty. "At the present moment you are poor as to money," the girl had said, and had said it as though such poverty were, after all, but a small thing in their relative positions one to another. That Nina should be loved, and Rebecca not loved, was a much greater thing. For her father's sake she would take the things sent—and for Rebecca's sake. She would take even the shoes which she wanted so sorely. She remembered well, as she read the last word, how, when Rebecca had been with her, she herself had pointed to the poor broken slippers which she wore, not meaning to excite such compassion as had now been shown. Yes, she would accept it all—as one woman should take such things from another.

"You will not make Shadrach carry them back?" said Ruth, imploring her.

"But he—has he sent nothing?—not a word?" She would have thought herself to be utterly incapable, before Ruth had come, of showing so much weakness; but her reserve gave way as she admitted in her own heart the kindness of Rebecca, and she became conquered and humbled. She was so terribly in want of his love at this moment! "And has he sent no word of a message to me?"

"I did not tell him that I was coming."

"But he knows;—he knows that father is so ill."

"Yes; I suppose he has heard that, because Souchev came to the house. But he has been out of temper with us all, and unhappy for some days past. I know that he is unhappy when he is so harsh with us."

"And what has made him unhappy?"

"Nay, I cannot tell you that. I thought perhaps it was because you did not come to him. You used to come and see us at our house."

Dear Ruth! Dearest Ruth, for saying such dear words! She had done more than Rebecca by the sweetness of the suggestion. If it were really the case that he were unhappy because they had parted from each other in anger, no further forgiveness would be necessary.

"But how can I come, Ruth?" she said. "It is he that should come to me."

"You used to come."

"Ah, yes. I came first with messages from father, and then because I loved to hear him talk to me. I do not mind telling, Ruth, now. And then I came because, because he said I was to be his wife. I thought that if I was to be his wife it would not be wrong that I should go to his father's house. But now that so many people know it—that they talk about it so much—I cannot go to him now."

"But you are not ashamed of being engaged to him because he is a Jew?"

"No," said Nina, rising herself to her full height; "I am not ashamed of him. I am proud of him. To my thinking there is no man like him. Compare him and Ziska, and Ziska becomes hardly a man at all. I am very proud to think that he has chosen me."

"That is well spoken, and I shall tell him."

"No, you must not tell him, Ruth. Remember that I talk to you as a friend and not as a child."

"But I will tell him, because then his brow will become smooth, and he will be happy. He likes to think that people know him to be clever; and he will be glad to be told that you understand him."

"I think him greater and better than all men; but, Ruth, you must not tell him what I say—not now, at least—for a reason."

"What reason, Nina?"

"Well, I will tell you, though I would not tell any one else in the world. When we parted last I was angry with him—very angry with him."

"He has been scolding you, perhaps?"

"I should not mind that—not in the least. He has a right to scold me."

"He has a right to scold me, I suppose; but I mind it very much."

"But he has no right to distrust me, Ruth. I wish he could see my heart and all my mind, and know every thought of my breast, and then he would feel that he could trust me. I would not deceive him by word or look for all the world. He does not know how true I am to him, and that kills me."

"I will tell him everything."

"No, Ruth; tell him nothing. If he cannot find it out without being told, telling will do no good. If you thought a person was a thief, would you change your mind because the person told you he was honest? He must find it out for himself if he is ever to know it."

When Ruth was gone, Nina knew that she had been comforted. To have spoken about her lover was in itself much; and to have spoken about him as she had done seemed almost to have brought him once more near to her. Ruth had declared that Anton was sad, and had suggested to Nina that the cause of his sadness was the same as her own. There could not but be comfort in this. If he really wished to see her would he not come over to the Kleinseite? There could be no reason why he should not visit the girl he intended to marry, and whom he was longing to see. Of course he had business which must occupy his time. He could not give every moment to thoughts of love, as she could do. She told herself all this, and once more endeavored to be comforted.

And then she unpacked the basket. There were fresh eggs, and a quantity of jelly, and some soup in a jug ready to be made hot, and such delicacies as invalids will eat when their appetites will serve for nothing else. And Nina, as she took these things out, thought only of her father. She took them as coming for him altogether, without any reference to her own use. But at the bottom of the basket there were stockings, and a handkerchief or two, and a petticoat, and a pair of shoes. Should she throw them out among the ashes behind the kitchen, or should she press them to her bosom as treasures to be loved as long as a single thread of them might hang together? She had taken them before—from her aunt Sophie—taken them in bitterness of spirit, and wearing them as though they were made of sackcloth, very sore to the skin. The acceptance of such things, even from her aunt, had been a refusal to her; but, in the old days, no idea of refusing them had come to her. Of course she must submit herself to her aunt's charity, because of her father's poverty. And garments had come to her which were old and worn, bearing unmistakable signs of Lotta's coarse but repulsive energies—raiment against which her feminine niceness would have rebelled, had it been possible for her in her misfortunes, to indulge her feminine niceness.

But there was a sweet scent of last summer's roses on the things which now lay in her lap, and each article was of the best; and, though each had been worn, they were all such as one girl would lend to another who was her dearest friend—who was to be made welcome to the wardrobe as though it were her own. There was something of the tenderness of love in the very folding, and respect as well as friendship in the care of the packing. Her aunt's left-off clothes had come to her in a big roll, fastened with a corking-pin. But Rebecca, with delicate fingers, had made each article of her tribute to look pretty, as though for the dress of such a one as Nina prettiness and care must always be needed. It was not possible for her to refuse a present sent to her with so many signs of tenderness.

And then she tried on the shoes. Of all things she needed these were the most necessary. At her first glance she thought that they were new; but she perceived that they had been worn, and she liked them all the better on that account. She put her feet into them and found that they were in truth a little too large for her. And this, even this, tended in some sort to gratify her feelings and soothe the asperity of her grief. "It is only a quarter of a size," she said to herself as she held up her dress, that she might look at her feet. And thus she resolved that she would accept her aunt's kindness.

On the following morning the priest came—that Father Jerome whom she had known as a child, and from whom she had been unable to obtain ghostly comfort since she had come in contact with Anton Trendelsohn. Her aunt and her father, Souchev and Lotta Luxa, had all threatened her with Father Jerome; and when it had become manifest to her that it would be necessary that the priest should visit her father in his extremity, she had at first thought that it would be well for her to hide herself. But the cowardice of this had appeared to her to be mean, and she had resolved that she would meet her old friend at her father's bedside. After all what would his bitter words be to her after such words as she endured from her lover?

Father Jerome came, and she received him in the parlor. She received him with downcast eyes and a demeanor of humility, though she was resolved to dare up against him if he should attack her too cruelly. But the man was as mild to her and as kind as ever he had been in her childhood, when he would kiss her, and call her his little nun, and tell her that if she would be a good girl she should always have a white dress and roses at the festival of St. Nicholas. He put his hand on her head and blessed her, and did not seem to have any abhorrence of her, because she was going to marry a Jew. And yet he knew it.

He asked her a few words as to her father, who was indeed better on this morning than he had been for the last few days, and then he passed into the sick man's room. And there, after a few faint words of confession from the sick man, Nina knelt by her father's bedside, while the priest prayed for them both, and forgave the sinner his sins, and prepared him for his further journey with such preparation as the extreme unction of his Church would afford.

When the prayer and the ceremony were over, and the viaticum had been duly administered the priest returned into the parlor, and Nina followed him. "He is stronger than I had expected to find him," said Father Jerome.

"He has rallied a little, father, because you were coming. You may be sure that he is very ill."

"I know that he is very ill, but I think that he may still last some days. Should it be so, I will come again." After that Nina thought that the priest would have gone; but he paused a few moments as though hesitating, and then spoke again, putting down his hat, which he had taken up. "But what is all this that I hear about you, Nina?"

"All what?" said Nina, blushing.

"They tell me that you have engaged yourself to marry Anton Trendelsohn, the Jew."

She stood before him confessing her guilt by her silence. "Is it true Nina?" he asked.

"It is true."

"I am very sorry for that;—very sorry. Could you not bring yourself to love some Christian youth, rather than a Jew? Would it not be better, do you think, to do so—for your soul's sake?"

"It is too late now, father."

"Too late! No; it can never be too late to repent of evil."

"But why should it be evil, Father Jerome? It is permitted; is it not?"

"The law permits it, certainly."

"And when I am a Jew's wife, may I not go to mass?"

"Yes;—you may go to mass. Who can hinder you?"

"And if I pray devoutly, will not the saints hear me?"

"It is not for me to limit their mercy. I think that they will hear all prayers that are addressed to them with faith and humility."

"And you, father, will you not give me absolution if I am a Jew's wife?"

"I would ten times sooner give it you as the wife of a Christian, Nina. My absolution would be nothing to you, Nina, if the while you had a deep sin upon your conscience." Then the priest went, being unwilling to endure further questioning, and Nina seated herself in a glow of triumph. And this was the worst that she would have to endure from the Church after all her aunt's threatenings,—after Lotta's bitter words, and the reproaches of all around her! Father Jerome—even Father Jerome himself, who was known to be the strictest priest on that side of the river in opposing the iniquities of his flock—did not take upon himself to say that her case as a Christian would be hopeless, were she to marry the Jew! After that she went to the drawer in her bedroom, and restored the picture of the Virgin to its place.

DECLINING INFLUENCE OF CASTE IN INDIA. The Times of India says: The advantages of caste privileges and the hardships of expulsion are beginning to lose their influence over the more enlightened natives of India, when they stand directly in the way of moral and intellectual advancement, is abundantly manifested by the numbers proceeding to Europe this summer to visit the Paris Exhibition. By the mail leaving for Suez on April 3rd and by the steamer mail there will proceed to Europe two Bhattins, two Bhoonsals, one Punjabee, one Brahmin from Guzerat, three Aurbos and four Parsees. The terms of excommunication from caste privileges—far more instant in their action and dread in their effects than the thunders of Rome, have already been held over the head of the majority of these; but they persevere in their intention notwithstanding."

STATISTICS OF THE FRENCH POPULATION.—It appears from official documents that in 1864 there were in France in every 10,000 marriages no less than 167 between relations. This proportion has been constantly increasing since 1861, when it was only 129 in 10,000. The average term of life in France was as high as 38.2 years in 1860, but it has since fallen to 37.7 in 1861; it was 37.2, the lowest figure since 1847. In France the percentage of men who cannot read is 27.88; that of women 41.45, the general average being 34.66. There has, however, been a great improvement in this respect since 1855, when the proportion was 39.92 per cent. The improvement is greater in the country than in the towns.

ITALIAN BRIGANDS.—The official journal of Naples publishes a long list of brigands who were shot or captured by the Italian troops in the middle of April. Three of these were shot by the carabinieri at Salerno, and their leader, a woman, was taken prisoner. At Potenza a famous brigand chief named "Il Predicatore" was killed and his whole band captured; and at Zernini two more brigands were shot by a detachment of cavalry. Notwithstanding this, brigandage is still on the increase in Southern Italy, and the achievements of the brigands are daily growing bolder and more frequent.

CENTENARIANS.—Those who are sceptical about the existence of centenarians will find several instances mentioned in the notes of the Registrar-General's Quarterly Return of persons dying close upon, or even over, their hundredth year of age. A female is said to have died at Hitchin at the age of 102 years. At Plymouth 101 years appears to have been attained by one person; and the registrar of Preston records one gentleman in his 99th year, and another of a farmer, who had enjoyed remarkably good health up to a short period before his death, which was hastened by a fall, and who, if he had lived until June 11th, would have attained the age of 100.

The final interchange of the ratifications of the treaties of commerce, friendship and navigation between the Italian and Hawaiian Governments by their respective Plenipotentiaries, the Marquis d'Azeglio and Sir John Bowring, took place at the Italian Legation on the 3rd inst.

EXTRAORDINARY ROMANCE.

The London correspondent of the Belust News Letter vouches for the following somewhat remarkable narrative:

A short time since an old lady, living in one of the small streets leading out of Albany street, Regent's Park, close to what was once the Colosseum, entered the shop of Mr. —, a poultryer in the neighborhood, and purchased a chicken. The tradesman was attentive to her, as such people ought to be, and the lady became a customer, always coming to the shop and giving her own orders. She appeared to be very old, but to have all her faculties about her. On Saturday evening (May 10th), she came when the poultryer happened to be very busy. She said she wished to speak to him, and he asked her to walk into the little parlour behind the shop, and he would come to her the moment he was disengaged. In the parlour she met the daughter of the poultryer, and after some conversation, in the course of which she remarked that the young girl looked ill, and required change of air, she produced a parcel, tied up in paper, and said, "Give this to your father, as he is busy and cannot come, and I cannot wait. I wish him to take you away for a little change, and here is something that will enable him to do so." She placed the parcel in the girl's hand, and told her to lock it up in a cupboard to which she pointed. The girl did so, and thought no more of the matter; but when, some hours subsequently, the shop was closed, and her father came into the parlour to get his supper, she produced the parcel, and gave the message by which it was accompanied. The poultryer laughed as he untied it, but, to his amazement, the parcel was found to consist of bank-notes and gold of the value of £4,000. There was also in it an antique gold watch and chain. The next day Mr. — hurried round to his customer to thank her, when she desired him to take his daughter out of town for a few days, and on their return to inform her of their arrival. This, of course, was done. A day or two after their return she called at the shop of Mr. —, and said she wished him to come to her house to tea, accompanied by his daughter. As they were about to leave, after having spoken of her hospitality, she said to Mr. —, "I wish you particularly to call upon me to-morrow morning, and bring with you two respectable persons upon whom you can rely." The next morning Mr. — attended, accompanied by the curate of the parish and a neighbor. The old lady then said that she was upwards of ninety years of age, and had no relative living but a cousin, an attorney, who, she alleged, had not treated her fairly, by whom, she said, she had lost £20,000. She added that she had £25,000 in Consols still left, and that as she felt she would not live long, and was resolved that the attorney should not get anything belonging to her, she had asked Mr. — to attend with two witnesses, in order that she might transfer to him, for his own absolute use, the £25,000 to which she had referred. She added that she knew very well what she was about, and that by giving him the money while she was alive, instead of bequeathing it to him at her death, he would be saved the payment of legacy duty to the extent of £2,000. This announcement appeared to be of so singular a nature that the clergyman very properly suggested that a solicitor should be sent for. The man of law came accordingly, and the transfer was duly effected. The old lady's presentiment of approaching dissolution proved to be correct, as she died a few weeks after making this singular disposition of her property. It seems that before her death she had intended to give the money to a chemist with whom she used to deal, but that he had offended her by some intimation to her wishes. The moral of this story (of the substantial accuracy of which there can be no doubt whatever) is that civility costs nothing, and may sometimes yield a rich reward.

THE LIVINGSTON EXPEDITION.—At the fortnightly meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday, May 13th, Sir Roger Murchison, Bart., K.C.B., presided. In an opening remarks, he said it would be a search in vain for the explorers to go into the interior of Africa in quest of Dr. Livingstone, and it was only their intention to go to the spot where he is reported to have been killed, and to put to rest the doubt whether he is dead or not. Her Majesty's Government has granted a sum of money in aid of the expedition, and Lord Stanley and the Admiralty have behaved most liberally in furthering the designs of the Society. Mr. E. T. Young, a clear-headed and well-accomplished man, who knows the river Zambesi and the people in the country which he has to traverse, will take charge of the expedition, which consists of three others besides himself. They will take the little iron and steel boat now building at Oshana, have it carried across the country till they reach a point above the rapids, and then sail for the northern end of the Lake Nyassa, which is only twenty or thirty miles from the spot where Livingstone is reported to have been murdered, and then get authentic information. He would remind his hearers that a caravan of Arab traders had passed within ten miles of the spot within a month or two after the alleged murder, and the report they heard was that Dr. Livingstone had passed into the friendly country beyond. Further, he had that morning received a letter from Dr. Kirke, stating that the Consul had strictly examined the Johannesburg men, but could not detect that they had told any falsehood. But Dr. Kirke also stated that a report had reached him that a trader just arrived at the coast from the interior of the country which Dr. Livingstone intended to visit, said that he had seen a white man there. At the time of writing Dr. Kirke had not found this trader. Nevertheless, the prevalence of reports such as these show the propriety of the search set on foot.

SYNAGOGUES IN THE EAST INDIES.—A Ham-burger, recently from Delhi, furnishes the Week-end of Amsterdam with an account of the Jews in the East Indies. He states that in Delhi, Meirat, Agra, Lahor, Benares, Patna, Dinajpou, Cabul, Candahar, Poona, Bangalore, Mysore, Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, and some other large towns, there are Jewish congregations. In the three last mentioned cities, there are a great number of European Israelites, whilst in the other places mostly natives, and cannot be distinguished from the Mahomedans by dress or manners, the only difference being in their religion.

BRUNN.—It is known that there exist only very few Jewish ancient tombstones even in very ancient congregations. The reason is that in the numerous persecutions to which the Jews were subjected in the middle ages fanaticism as often wreaked its vengeance on the dead as on the living. The Jewish cemeteries were as often the scene of devastation as the synagogues. It therefore deserves to be noticed that at Brunn, the capital of Moravia, a Jewish tombstone has lately been discovered, which is said to be a thousand years old.

STATISTICS OF AUSTRALIA.—The memorial of the Australian Conference on postal communication with Great Britain contains the following remarkable statement:—"Within the last sixteen years the two colonies of Victoria and New South Wales have produced a supply of gold amounting in value to £150,000,000 sterling, five-sixths of which has been the produce of Victoria alone. The colony of New South Wales has raised from the earth 4,617,100 tons of coal, valued at £2,742,224; and her coal-fields, north and south of the port of Sydney, may be said to be inexhaustible. New Zealand has risen within the last few years to an important position as a producer of gold and wool. In ten years the colony of South Australia has exported copper to the value of £4,751,638 while the produce of her corn-fields is unsurpassed by other countries. The colony of Queensland, in addition to her pastoral and mineral wealth, has established, by successful experiment, her capability of growing both cotton and sugar. Nor are the resources of Tasmania unimportant to the British Empire. Her wool, grain and timber, with the oil of her wharf fisheries, form a valuable part of Australian exports. In the year 1865 the exports of the six associated colonies in five articles of production, which are selected for their conspicuous value to the world, amounted to more than 21 millions sterling—viz., wool, £8,149,636; gold, £11,665,811; grain, £1,385,748; copper ore, £2618,472; coal, £274,303. The imports into the six colonies in 1865 amounted to £34,936,997; and although this includes the intercolonial trade and the imports from foreign countries, by far the greater part of this seaborne commerce assists in sustaining the manufacturing power of the United Kingdom. The shipping returns of 1865 for the Australian colonies give an aggregate of arrivals amounting to 1,959,091 tons, and 2,017,724 tons as the aggregate of departures. The present number of those animals most useful to man, as compared with the number only 42 years ago, will exhibit alike the progress and the internal wealth of the colonies. In the year 1825 there were in all Australia 6,142 horses, 134,515 head of horned cattle, and 237,622 sheep. In 1865 the returns for Australian colonies alone, omitting New Zealand, were 550,874 horses, 3,171,175 horned cattle, and 2,293,744 sheep. The population of Australia is fast approaching an aggregate 2,000,000."

STRANGE TASTE IN COLOR.—In New York, some weeks ago, delicate pink cards, to the number of twenty or more, were issued to announce that a "Crimson Dinner Party" would be given by one of our most fashionable and wealthy ladies, residing on Murray Hill, whose name we are not at liberty to mention. It was literally a "crimson dinner." Everything was crimson; the table-cloth had a crimson border, a foot deep, with bordered napkins to match, and all the plates, dishes, platters, coffee cups, fruit-standards, finger-bowls, &c., were of crimson glass or china. The dinner was served in the most elegant and expensive style, and the dishes were placed on crimson silk mats, with gilt fringes—the silver on the table being valued at ten thousand dollars. The dining-room was hung with rich crimson silk, and beside the plate of each guest was placed a beautifully choice bouquet of crimson flowers—the waiters wearing crimson cloth coats à l'Anglaise. After having sat for hours at the table, the ladies withdrew to the drawing-rooms, and left the gentlemen to their wine and cigars. Some of the gentlemen, then seemed to imagine they must keep up the feature of the entertainment, and accordingly drank considerable "red wine," and soon their faces became flushed to a crimson color. The guests separated at a late hour, having passed a most enjoyable evening.

DISCOVERY OF LAKE DWELLINGS.—A complete Pompeii of lake dwellings has been discovered near Daber, in Pomerania. Professor Virchow, to whom the discovery is mainly due, has succeeded in laying open, on the western side of the Daber Lake, more than 20 larger and as many smaller rooms or dwellings. Each of the former is 12ft. large, 10ft. deep; the latter average from 6ft. to 4ft. and 4ft. Between every two of the larger huts there is a distance of 1ft. to 1½ft., between the smaller ones the distance is about 4ft., while the larger and the smaller ones are some 3ft. apart. It is doubtful whether the smaller buildings were meant for stables or out-houses. Many remains of bones, horns, leather, combs, needles made of bone, wooden and clay vessels, &c., were found. Similar dwellings have also been discovered near Persanzig, in the New Stettin district, which seem to have been destroyed by fire. The wood used in them, where not burnt, is still in a remarkably good state of preservation.

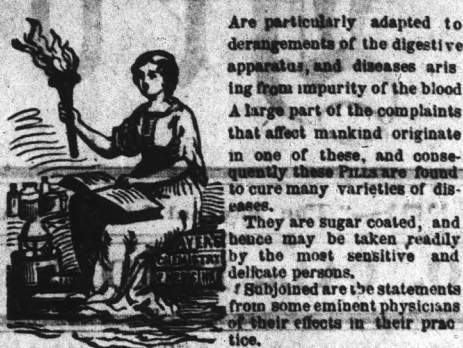

ACUTE HEARING OF THE BLIND.—By the sound of his voice in a room a blind person will often satisfy himself whether the room is empty or not, and pretty frequently will decide with perfect accuracy. A good (story) illustrating this fine faculty is told. A blind messenger (Sootch) was sent with a mattress to a customer, and with it the bill for payment. "To my surprise," says the sender of mattress, "the messenger returned with the account and the mattress too. 'I've brought bath, yee see, sir,' said he. 'How so?' 'Indeed, sir, I didna like to leave yonder, else I'm sure we'd ne'er see the siller—there's nae a stick of furniture within the door!' 'How do you come to know that?' Oh, sir, two taps on the floor wi' my stick soon tell me that."

SUICIDE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—On May 16th one of the workmen employed in repairing the North Tower, which was damaged by the fire at the Crystal Palace, deliberately committed suicide by leaping from the topmost stage of the lofty structure. The man advanced to the edge of the gallery which is carried round the base of the summit of the tower, and, waving his hat, called out to the gang of men with whom he had been employed, "Good bye, lads!" As he spoke he jumped off. He fell a short depth of more than 150 feet. His body, horribly smashed and mangled was found among the ruins of the glass-roofs of the School of Art, Science and Literature, beneath which the great fire originated which destroyed this end of the Crystal Palace. English Paper.

EDITORIAL COURTESIES.—In a recent number of the Forreston Fustiler appeared the following editorial note:—"Postscript.—We stop the press with pleasure to announce the decease of our contemporary, Mr. Snagge, editor of the Forreston Flash. He has now gone to another and a better world. Persons who have taken the Flash will find the Fustiler a good paper."

DR. BOURNE'S BATHS.—Dr. Bourne's 27 years of experience enable him to cure through his baths, with complete success neuralgia, paralytic humation, bronchitis, consumption (incipient), puerility, fever and ague, all other fevers, erysipelas, colds, coughs, oak-poisoning (for which Dr. Bourne has discovered the only and certain cure). The baths are No. 10 Masonic Temple no Post street, near Montgomery.

AYER'S PILLS

Are particularly adapted to disorders of the digestive apparatus, and diseases arising from impurity of the blood. A large part of the complaints that affect mankind originate in one of these, and consequently these Pills are found to cure many varieties of disease.

They are sugar coated, and hence may be taken readily by the most sensitive and delicate persons. Subjoined are the statements from some eminent physicians of their effects in their practice.

FROM DR. E. W. CURTIS, of New Orleans.
"Your Pills are the prime of purges. Their excellent qualities surpass any cathartic we possess. They are mild, but very certain and efficient in their action on the bowels, which makes them invaluable to us in the daily treatment of disease."

FOR JAUNDICE AND ALL LIVER COMPLAINTS.
From Dr. Theodore Bell, of New York City.
"Not only are your Pills admirably adapted to their purpose as an aperient, but I find their beneficial effects upon the Liver very marked indeed. They have in my practice proved more effectual for the cure of bilious complaints than any one remedy I can mention. I sincerely rejoice that we have at length a purgative which is worthy the confidence of the profession and the people."

DYSPEPSIA—INDIGESTION.
From Dr. Henry J. Knox, of St. Louis.
"The Pills you were kind enough to send me have been all used in my practice, and have satisfied me that they are truly an extraordinary medicine. So peculiarly are they adapted to the diseases of the human system that they seem to work on them alone. I have cured some cases of dyspepsia and indigestion with them, which had resisted all other remedies we commonly use. Indeed, I have experimentally found them to be effective in almost all the complaints for which you recommended them."

FOR HEADACHE—SICK HEADACHE—POULSTOMACH—PILES—DROPSY—PLETHORA—PARALYSIS—FITS—DYSNTERY—DIARRHŒA—RELAXA—ETC.
From Dr. Edward Boyd, Baltimore.
"Dear Dr. Ayer: I cannot answer you what complaints I have cured with your Pills better than to say all that we ever treat with a purgative medicine. I place great dependence on an efficient cathartic in my daily clinical work, and in no better way as I do with your Pills as I find as best we have, I of course value them highly."

Most of the Pills in market contain Mercury, which, although a valuable remedy in skillful hands, is dangerous in a public pill, from the disastrous consequences that frequently follow its incautious use. These contain no mercury or mineral substance whatever.

REPORT ON THE CONSTRUCTION AND PROSPECTS OF THE "AVITOR!"
By a Distinguished Practical Mechanician of this city:
SAN FRANCISCO, June 7, 1867.

F. MARSHALL, Esq.—Dear Sir:—Having visited on Wednesday last the Avitor building, at Shiel Mound Park, and inspected the machine, I take pleasure in recording my recollections of it, and the great success which it has achieved. I was struck by the simplicity of the machine, and the ease with which it could be learned, and to study the Avitor, in order to speak, so far as might be, with knowledge; and I am satisfied that the principle here followed is the right one. The machine is light, solid and well finished. I think there is needed greater capacity for holding of gas, and a modification of the machine to enable it to be compressed, so that the gas-holder may be filled with pure gas. The arrangements for controlling and managing the different portions of the machinery could not be better; the engine I think adequate to perform all the services required of it. As regards the probable velocity of the Avitor, I would say nothing. Once afloat, and I can see nothing to hinder its floating; it is merely a question of resistance. For an invention so novel, the Avitor has met with comparatively few practical obstacles; and when it is remembered that the difficulties in the way of Fulton's experiment were much greater than those that have kept the Avitor from being constructed, it is in both cases equally sound, it will be seen that there are good reasons for the belief that the machine, with the modifications referred to, will yet successfully navigate the air.

The excitement as a steam generator, which, no doubt, will be successful, will furnish a compact and light fuel for generating steam. After the Avitor has been constructed, it may be made to serve other purposes, such as propelling machinery suggested, but, ultimately, it must be a success. The expenses to make the contemplated changes, or rather enlargement, of the machine, I think, will be under three thousand dollars. Hoping and firmly believing in the success of your enterprise, I remain your obedient servant, etc.

OPINION OF PETER DONAHUE, ESQ.
I have followed with much interest, and have personally observed the construction of the Avitor. I am so thoroughly convinced of the practicability of the enterprise, and so fully satisfied of the value of the observations of George K. Guyas, Esq., respecting the two modifications to be adopted that I have no hesitation in saying that, when these changes are made, the Avitor will be a success. As an inventor, and fully realize the expectations of the public. As soon as the elevating power shall, in this way, have been perfected, the work will be completed, because the propelling force is ample, the machinery for elevating and depressing sufficient, the steering apparatus in fine working order, and, in short, the whole of the Avitor is fully under the control of the operator.

BABITTONIAN, OR SELF-TEACHING PENMANSHIP
The system of Babbittonian Penmanship is pre-eminently self-instructing. With its ample explanations of right and wrong forms—its sixty wood cuts—its plain and intelligent rules, you may sit down by your own desk and become a finer penman than he could sit at a much greater cost in his usual way with a living teacher.

There is a very great demand for the Penman in the commercial world, and this system, at a trifling expense, imparts a skillful command of the Pen, worth hundreds of dollars to its fortunate possessor.

Penmanship is an indispensable accomplishment to ladies and gentlemen, and is a valuable asset in a series of elegant copies in the Ladies' Style.

Business men have sometimes lost thousands of dollars from ignorance in regard to Business Forms, and there is reason to see that without additional charge a fine variety of Business forms and Abbreviations. To sum up the excellencies of the system, it is—

1.—Scientific in its arrangement of Principles.
2.—Artistic in its Movements and Flourishes.
3.—Practical in its Combinations and Applications.
4.—Stylish in its neat and chaste Gracefulness.
5.—Superior for Legibility, Rapidity and Beauty.
6.—Most Disciplinatory for Fingers, Arms and Muscles.

7.—Unexcelled for Comprehensiveness and Simplicity.
8.—Complete and Self Teaching for Private Learning.

9.—Time, Labor and Expense Saving for Pupils and Teachers.

THE BABITTONIAN PENMANSHIP is published on durable card-board slips, ninety-two copies illustrated, put in a neat package with a Chart; the whole complete, at the low price of $1.50.

THE BABITTONIAN PENS.—One reason why the country is so flooded with poor pens is, that they are generally made by mechanics, rather than by artists and experienced penmen, the only parties really understanding the requirements of a good article.

THE BABITTONIAN PENS, made in the most finished style, by skillful artisans, after models prepared according to the combined wisdom and experience of several masters and old Professors of Penmanship, are admirably adapted to meet the public wants, and are a great favorite with the most exquisite little instruments for delicate writing ever constructed.

THE BABITTONIAN EXTRA FINE PEN is pronounced by a large number of elegant Penmen to be more free, more durable, and more varied in capacity for either fine or coarse strokes than any foreign pen whatever. Suitable for elegant writing, it is a great favorite with the ladies and gentlemen.

THE BABITTONIAN BUSINESS PEN, having great freedom and variety of movement, is unequalled for general business or school purposes. Somewhat coarser than the Extra Fine, it wears longer and moves more easily on paper.

This pen is now in use in the large counting-houses and banks in this city. WARRIN HOLT, General Agent, 305 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS!

PURE AND POWERFUL TONIC!

CORRECTIVE AND ALTERATIVE.

OF WONDERFUL EFFICACY IN DISEASES

Stomach, Liver and Bowels,

PROTECTIVE PROPERTIES:

Prevents Fever and Ague and Billions Remittent Fevers; Fortifies the System against Miasma and the evil effects of unwholesome water; invigorates the organs of digestion and the bowels; Steadies the Nerves and tends to Prolong Life.

REMEDIAL PROPERTIES:

Cures Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Sick and Nervous Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirit, Constipation, Colic, Intermittent Fevers, Sea Sickness, Cramps and Spasms, and all complaints of either sex arising from Bodily Weakness.

Whether inherent in the system or PRODUCED BY SPECIAL CAUSES.

Nothing that is not wholesome. Genial and restorative in its nature, enters into the composition of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind; no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants, with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants.

The weak stomach is readily invigorated, and the appetite restored by this Tonic, and hence it works wonders in cases of Dyspepsia, and in less confirmed forms of Indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless aperient, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the Constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretory organs.

Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous Attacks, Lowness of Spirits, and Fits of Langour, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes.

As a Genuine Tonic, Hostetter's Bitters produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of Constitutional Weakness, Premature Decay, and Debility and Decrepitude arising from old age, it exercises the electric influence. In the congested stages of all diseases, it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-enforce and re-establish them.

Last, but not least, it is the only safe stimulant, being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acrid elements present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day.

DR. H. A. BENTON,

Has been performing many wonderful cures in this city the past two years, and as his practice is fast increasing at the office, finds it difficult to attend outside calls, concluded to invite R. H. OLMSTEAD, M. D., of Napa City, to join him. Dr. Olmstead has been 18 years successfully treating obstinate cases, with water, electricity, and the magnetic force, (and when needed, Electric Remedies, of which he is a graduate of that school); also being the seventh son of a celebrated Physician, and having a powerful organization; his magnetic hands, like magic, dispel pain and disease in a wonderful manner; he is also a natural Bone Setter.

DR. OLMSTEAD has this day associated with Dr. H. A. BENTON, the Medical Electrician and Homoeopathist, at his office, 311 Bush street, San Francisco, who having all the necessary facilities, such as the Patent Electro-Chemical, Sulph. Vapor, Hot Air, and Medicated Baths, which are valuable aids in removing all curable diseases, whether acute or chronic. The combined skill, together with the aid of an excellent Lady Assistant, gives an assurance of Cure to Many, Benefit to All, and Injury to None.

Special Notices.

A YOUNG LADY RETURNING TO her country home, after a sojourn of a few months in the City, was hardly recognised by her friends. In place of a coarse, rustic, dusky face, she had a soft, rosy complexion of almost marble smoothness, and instead of twenty-three she really appeared but eighteen. Upon inquiry as to the cause of so great a change, she plainly told them that she used the Circassian Balm, and considered it an invaluable acquisition to any Lady's toilet. By its use any Lady or Gentleman can improve their personal appearance an hundred fold. It is simple in its combination, as Nature herself is simple, yet unsurpassed in its efficacy in drawing impurities from the complexion, cleansing and beautifying the skin and complexion. By its direct action on the cuticle it draws from it all its impurities, kindly healing the same, and leaving the surface as Nature intended it should be, clear, soft, smooth and beautiful. She will send when desired a certified certificate, or written guarantee, that the picture is what it purports to be. Das Weib des Kargisten.

Novelle von R. Ben Aron.

(Fortsetzung.)

Die Aussagen Rebecas sowie der übrigen
Zeugen stimmten dergestalt mit denen des Angeklagten überein, daß es dem Ankläger
leicht ward, die Thatsache in ihrem wahren Lichte darzustellen, und er dem dazukommenden Bürgermeister, der als Ortsbehörde das beste Zeugnis für Rebecas bisheriges Ver-brennend ablegte, sagen konnte, daß, so leib es ihm auch thäte, er wahrscheinlich wenn Meyer seiner Verlesung erlege, die An-klage auf Todtschlag richten müßte, und daß die einzige Frage vorher von Reben ausge-sprochene Drohung, die weder er noch Rebecca leugnete, als ein erschwerender Um-stand ins Gewicht fallen würde. Die Nachausfragen des Kreisphysikus wurden einfach zu Protokoll genommen, und schon wollte der Richter den schriftlichen Rapport des be-handelnden Arztes, Dr. Elias Benheim ganz einfach zu den Akten legen, als der Kreis-physikus ihm bemerkte, daß sein junger College seine Meinung durchaus nicht theile, ihr ganz entschieden entgegenstehe, und es des halb vielleicht gut wäre, wenn das Gericht gleich Kenntniß von dem ärztlichen Gutachten des Dr. Benheim nähme.

Mit etwas geringfügiger Erläuterung nahm
der Richter den Rapport des jungen Arztes und begann die Lectüre desselben; doch kaum hatte er die erste Seite gelesen, als sein Ge-sicht den Ausdruck des höchsten Interesses annahm, was sich je weiter er las, immer mehr steigerte.

„Hm, hm, sagte er, nachdem er geendet, ich glaube, daß die Unternehmung spiegelglatt sei, und nun sehe ich, daß es eine der compli-cirtesten sein wird, die wir seit langen Jahren gehabt — hm, wir müssen das habe Städchen vernehmen, — vor allen Dingen aber den Verwundeten. Wo ist der Herr Doctor Benheim? Zum Glück, das ist ein junger Arzt, der stark debilitirt — was sagen sie dazu, Herr Kreisphysikus?

Obgleich ich die Meinung meines Kol-legen nicht im geringsten theile, so beruht die
selbe doch, ich muß es gestehen, so festen Hy-pothesenbasis, daß ich selbst beim hochschätz-baren Gerichte eine Konstatation von andern Ärzten oder eines Mitgliedes des Medizi-nalcollegiums der Provinz beantrage.

„Hm, hm, brummt der Richter, vertauschte Gesichte!

Elias trat ein und der Kreisphysikus trat
ihm entgegen.

„Sei, College, sei, sagte er ihm leise und hast lachend — Sie haben Unrecht, aber das
schadet nichts — wir wollen den Herren den Kopf schon recht heiß machen — nur recht viele technische Ausdrücke, hören sie!

„Ihr Gutachten, Herr Doctor, sagte der Richter, hat mich erheitert, und sie setzen uns
dabei in große Verlegenheit, sie machen
aus dieser ebenso einfachen wie schmerzlichen
Affaire einer der complicirtesten, die dieser
Kreischrichtshof wohl noch je gehabt hat.
Sagen sie auch wohl ihre Relation überdacht?

Somit würde ich sie wahrscheinlich nicht
eingereicht haben, entgegnete Elias.

Aber sie sind im offenkundigen Widerspruch mit dem Herrn Kreisphysikus!

Ich bejaure.
Sie behaupten, daß der Knüttelwurf nicht
die innere Verletzung hervorgerichtet habe,
die der Kranke, ihrer beiderseitigen Voraussetzung gemäß, unterlegen muß — Sie be-haupten, daß ein heftiger Schreck allein die Zergründung eines Blutgefäßes zur Folge gehabt hätte, und daß die, durch den Schreck
gefügte Konvulsion seine lebensgefährliche Bedeutung habe.

Dieses umgekehrt ist in der That meine Meinung.

Hm, hm, und wie wollen sie dieses bewei-sen?

Ich habe die Gründe dafür in meiner Relation schriftlich angegeben.

Und stimmen sie dem Vorschlage des Hrn.
Kreisphysikus bei, eine ärztliche Consultation
zu veranlassen?

Ich fürchte, es wird keine Zeit dazu übrig bleiben.

„Nun, dann wollen wir ihn nur gleich vernehmen: ich muß überhaupt bald fort; dürfte ich bitten, meine Herren, mich zu dem Ver-wundeten in begleiten.“

Das „Gericht“ von den beiden Ärzten begleitet, verließ das Rathhaus und begab sich nach Meyers Wohnung. Als sie vor Reb Jacobs Thür vorkamen, wollte die-ser seinen Sohn zu sich.

„Wie sieht's? fragte er ihn.“

Entweder ich blamiere mich fabelhaft, oder Reben kommt mit einer kleinen Gefährdung frisch davon. Ist Cleazar noch immer im Kobchow, ist alles geordnet?

So wie ich gehört habe, ja.

Adieu! ich muß fort.

Wissen sie, Herr College, sagte der Kreis-physikus leise zu Elias, als dieser wieder
neben ihm herging, ich würde eine Flasche Champagner zum Besten geben, wenn noch zu viele Incidentsfälle dazwischenkämen, daß
der Richter heute nicht fortkäme.

„Sie wo das?“

„Es würde mich köstlich freuen; dann
würden sie in der Rejouissance heute kein Chomber spielen können, und dann wäre die
ganze Gesellschaft in Verzweiflung.“

Sie böser Mensch!

„Das soll man in einem kleinen Städtchen anfangen, lieber College? man wird böse aus lauter Langweile; es wird ihnen auch noch so gehen.“

VIII.

Majestät des Todes! erhabene, unerbit-liche Majestät! Majestät ohne Gleichen, die du alles auf Erden überragst; wie schauer-voll prangst du in deiner düstern Macht, wenn
der belebende Hoffnungsstrahl des Glaubens nicht seinen Glanz auf dich wirft und die graue Finsterniß, die dich umgibt, in ein goldenes Abendroth verwandelt? Warum führt man böse Menschen nicht an das Ster-bebett eines Bösen? Sie würden tief erschüttert von dannen weichen. Und warum führt man sie denn nicht, um das letzte Glükselächeln eines Gerechten, eines Gläubigen
zu sehen? Würde ihr noch so verstocktes Herz diesem Vergleich zu widerstehen fähig sein?

„Nein! gewiß nicht! Die Atmosphäre, die einen Todestampf umgibt, ist eine eigenthümlich erhabene, und die Seele, die sich zu ihren Schöpfer erhebt, verläßt diese Erde
nicht, ohne einen bleibenden Eindruck auf ihre Schwefelsterne, die noch in der Verbannung des Tages der Befreiung harren, auszuü-
ben.“

Da liegt jener Mann, dem noch vor weni-gen Tagen ein unheimliches Feuer aus den grauen Augen leuchtete, und diese Augen sind dem Erlöschen nahe. Jener Mund, der so viele häßliche Worte gesprochen, steht! wie er eingefallen ist; sieht! wie er sucht und un-verständliche Worte murmelt; jener geschnit-tene Körper, der wie der einer Schlange sich zu winden verstand: da liegt er gebrochen, ein nimm vom Unwetter zerbrochenen Sandstein gleich.

Das Gerücht ist da gewesen, hatte vom Sterbenden allerlei Ausruf verlangt, doch
er ist unfähig gewesen, ihm die geringste zu ertheilen. Seitdem die Ärzte ihm zuletzt gehört, ist das Delirium eingetreten, und Fieberphantasien nehmen dem Unglücklichen
das letzte Bewußtsein seiner selbst.

Elias hat in der Eile die Aestheten benach-richtigen lassen, und sie sind herbeigeeilt, um die scheidende Seele mit ihren Gebeten zu begleiten. Auch Reb Isaac ist amwesend, denn es ist eine gottgefällige That einen Sterbenden die Gebete hören zu lassen, die
seine Väter seit Jahrtausenden gebetet ha-
ben.

Man sagt, daß je frommer und gottes-fürchtiger die Leute sind, die bei dem Dahinscheiden beten, je leichter sein Todestampf sei, und die, welche in einer Gemeinde als sehr fromm bezeichnet werden, halten es für eine Art von Pflicht, alles aufzubieten, um einer von den zehn — nach dem Geleite Moses Gottesmündigen zu sein, die um einen Ster-benden versammelt sein sollen.

Die Männer stehen bedeckten Hauptes am oberen Ende des Bettes und murmeln die vorgeschriebenen Gebete, von Zeit zu Zeit einen Blick auf den Doctor werfend; denn im Augenblicke, wo nach menschlichem Gut-achten die allerletzten Lebensaugenblicke ein-treten, müssen sie alle, nach dem Geleite, ihre
Stimmen erheben und laut der entseffelten Seele die Worte des Geleites auf ihre Himmelsbahn zurufen; jene Worte, die den Jün-ger schon seit Jahrhunderten als Trost in all ihren Leiden, als Bundeszeichen in all ihren Verbannungen dienen — jene sacrosancten Worte, welche selbst die sogenannten ange-klärten Juden in den großen Städten mit einer gewissen religiösen Ehen vernehmen —
das „Schema Jisroel“, jene Worte, die mit gedenkten Buchstaben an der Bundeslade
glänzen und in schlichter Schrift an jeder Thür des Hauses stehen, die sie sich alle
Morgens bei dem Tephillingebete vor die
Stirne binden; jene Worte, das Alpha und Omega ihres Glaubens, die Effen ihrer
Religion:

„Höre Israel! der Herr dein Gott ist ein einiger Herr!“

Reb Isaac steht dem Bett am nächsten;
sein chynwüdiges Gesicht ist von tiefer Mü-hung erfüllt; er denkt, indem er die Gebete
spricht, daß der Sterbende in seinem ganzen Leben nie sein Freund gewesen, daß er ihm
nie wohl gewollt habe, wie jeder gläubige
und wahrer Jude es doch mit den Kindern seines Volkes thun müsse. Er fragt sich, ob, wenn es in Gottes unerforschlichem Rath-schluß gewesen wäre, daß er die Mittel in Händen gehabt hätte, dem Meyer etwas Schlechtes zuzufügen, er seine Antipathie hätte betragen können, und er dankt Gott in seinem Herzen, ihm nicht in solche Verführung geführt zu haben.

Und immer fort gehen die Gebete und immer aufgeregter wird der Kranke und immer vernehmlicher werden die zusammenhängen-den Worte, die seine sterbende Zunge her-vorläßt.

Da öffnet sich plötzlich die Thüre, und ein Mann tritt athemlos ein und nähert sich dem
Doctor Elias.

Cleazar hat das Gerücht nach Kobchow beschaffen lassen, sagte er.

Wie, was? fragte der Doctor befürtzt, ist
mein Bruder etwas passiert?

Nichts, ich weiß nicht, aber ihm ist nichts
passirt, soviel ich weiß; das Wasser läuft mit Macht ab, von oben der Wüste aus kam man ihn ganz genau sehen, inmitten der Kre-beiter.

Aber wozu das Gerücht?

Ich weiß nicht, sagt jener mit lauter
Stimme, sie sagen, man hätte im See etwas gefunden, sie sagen, einen Leichnam, — der sah.

Ein großer Schrei unterbricht den Erzähler; alle wenden sich instig um, und ein haarsträubendes Schauspiel bietet sich ihren Blickern dar.

Mit geisthaft weitgeöffneten Augen stiert
sie Meyer an, seine bebende, magere Hand hat sich mit der letzten Kraftanstrengung erhoben, seine Lippe zuckt krampfhaft — stammelt er, Kobchower See — Gnade — Gnade Gott Israels, ich hab's ja nicht gethan...
nein... nein... es ist nicht wahr... ich hab
nur zu, wie er den richtigen Weg im Schreck verloren... nein ich habe nichts gethan...
Varnherzigkeit... o, ich bin unschuldig...
war ich kein Vater?

Der Sterbende ist erschöpft... alle Anwes-enden sind wie versteinert; Reb Isaac hat

sich zuerst gefast, er ergreift Meyers Hand.

Meyer! ruft er mit erhobener Stimme, in

wenigen Minuten wird Dich der Gott Abrahams,

Moyses und Jakobs richten. der Gott der die Rote Korahs in einem Augenblicke vernichtet

und der immer wieder, und immer von neuem seinem reinen Volke verzich. Meyer! Schnee! Schnee überall! Schnee überall!

...bin ich dein Wegweiser? ... Rechts ...

der Pfad links führt zum See! Schnee! ...

Wind! ... das Eis hält nicht

Rechts! ... O wie es fracht! ... er schreit, o was schreit er? ... Schema Jisroel, schreit er ...

nun nichts mehr! ... Ruhe ... Wind ...

er schreit nicht mehr!

Meyer! ... riefen alle die Umgebenden; denn an Gott! Gott! ... stammelte er ... Elias erhob sich und machte ein Zeichen! eine convulsische

Bewegung des Krampfes! Schema Jisroel schrien die Anwesenden wie aus einem Munde Der Doctor ließ den Körper, den er aufgerichtet hatte, in den Kissen zurücksinken. Meyer war tot!

Wie der zuletzt bei Meyer Eintretende es

gefragt, was eine Botenschaft Glazars an den

Bürgermeister gelangt, in Folge deren dieser

das Gericht requiriert hatte, ihn nach Kobchow

zu begleiten. Der Untersuchungsrichter machte ein ziemlich unzufriedenes Gesicht, besonders da

ihn der Bürgermeister sagte, daß in Folge des

Regens des vorhergehenden Tages der Fahrweg nach

Kobchow fast impracticabel geworden sei, und man daher den

Fußweg längs des Sees einschlagen müsse. Der Kreisphysikus rief sich vergnügt die Hände und

schmunzelte vor sich hin, wenn er an die verwaiste

Partie L'hombré am Abend dachte, und versprach sich, daß, wenn, wie es

voranzuführen war, sein Gutachten in diesem

neuen Falle erteilt werden müsse, er alles anbieten

würde, um dieses so viel wie möglich in die

Lage zu ziehen! Der Fußpfad lag bis nach Kobchow

kurzt den Weg dermaßen, daß man ihn in höchstens

zwei Viertelstunden gehen kann, und eine ganze

Anzahl von Neugierigen — Christen und Juden,

Jung und Alt war dem Gerichte gefolgt, denn die

sich seit so wenigen Tagen Schlag auf Schlag

folgenden und so ungewöhnlichen Ereignisse hatten

eine mehr als fieberhafte Aufregung unter den

Bewohnern des Städtchens hervorgerufen. Dumme

Geschichte, brummte der Richter vor sich hin,

Gott weiß, um wie viel Uhr wir nach Hause kommen werden. Wenn wir nur nicht ganz und gar hier über Nacht bleiben müssen, meinte der Kreisphysikus. Was, über Nacht? was reden sie

Herr Doctor? Nun, nun! einen Leichnam zu

untersuchen, Thatenbestand festzusetzen, Protokoll

aufzunehmen und so weiter, das alles erfordert

doch Zeit — was sagen sie dazu, Herr Bürgermeister. Ich sage — ich sage — daß ich mit einem Donnerwetter werde dazwischen fahren

mögen; sehen sie meine Herren, da vor uns,

die zwei Jungs, die sich da prügeln; hol mich

der Herr, und lassen sich auch gar nicht durch

die Behörden — verwünschte Rangen! Wer sind

sie denn, kennen sie sie, Herr Bürgermeister,

aber, wenn ich nicht irre, hat ja der eine das

Gesicht voller Blut. Das ist dieser Ausbund

der Menschheit, ein Berliner, ein zukünftiger

Doctor — ich muß den Jungen züchtigen lassen, oder er steckt mir ganz Nagel in Brand. Sehen sie doch, aber sehen sie doch, wie er drauf los-haut und der andere ist auch voll Blut! Ha

Mendel Mendel warte nur Du, Range ich ame schon. Als Mendel den Ruf des Bürgermeisters gehört, dreht er sich plötzlich um, fixiert den Kommenden mit dem Blick und

stößt aus voller Kehle ein weitläufig schallendes

„Hurrah“ aus. Ich werde den Jungen aufhängen lassen

zu der Bürgermeister entrüstet, sehen Sie er

läßt nicht nach wer aber mag der andere sein

doch nicht mein Rudolph von dem Es ist

Claus Nischke! sagte einer der Nachfolgenden, die sich den Behörden genähert hatten. So läuft, läuft, trennt sie von einander, die

Jungen können sich ja Schaden thun. Ein paar Männer laufen eiligen Schrittes dem

Kampfsplatz zu, und während dessen sagt

der Kreisphysikus lachend: Vielleicht eine neue

Untersuchung und wir werden vielleicht noch

länger. Herr! reden sie nicht solchen Unsinn, sagt der Richter entrüstet, Unterbindung solcher Schlingel? Fünfundsiebenzig Fiebel! Ich

muß fort ... hab' nötige Beschäftigung zu

ist das wahr, was dieser Knabe sagt, fragt der Richter den Delinquenten. Claus

Nischke fängt an zu heulen und sammelt

unverständliche Worte, aus denen die

Umstehenden jedoch deutlich die Drohung

entnehmen, daß er es seinem Vater sagen

würde. Während man ihm gut zuredet, muß Mendel noch einmal den ganzen Vorfall

erzählen, und er thut es mit einem merkwürdigen Gedächtnisse. Endlich haben die Anwesenden

Claus beruhigt, der Bürgermeister hat ihm

verständlich gemacht, daß, wenn er nicht die

Wahrheit sage, er bestraft würde, aber wenn er

ordentlich und vernünftig sein wolle, er ganz

frei ausgehen würde; ja noch mehr, der

Bürgermeister versprach ihm sogar, keine

Nachforschungen über die Pfaffen anzustellen,

obgleich er sich schon denken könne, wo sie

herkämen, da die einzig reifen im ganzen

Städtchen sich nur in seinem eigenen Garten befänden. Claus beruhigt sich, und fängt an,

die Leute um sich herum ziemlich dreist anzu-

sehen; schon hat er einen triumphirenden

Blick auf Mendel geworfen und ihm von neuem

die geballte Faust gezeigt, als sich der

Richter ihm näherte und zu ihm sagt: Nun,

mein Sohn, erzähle mir in einigen

Worten, was du weißt, damit ich sehe, ob es

der Mühe werth ist, dich zu vernehmen, oder

nicht. Ich weiß nichts, stotterte jener, mein

Vater hat gesagt, ich soll stillschweigen und kein dummes Zeug sagen. Wenn es dummes

Zeug ist, hat dein Vater ganz Recht, mein

Sohn, aber sag mir, befindest du dich

nahe bei Meyer? Ja, ganz nahe. Und sagst, wie haben den Wurf that? Und holte so aus, und Claus machte die

bezeichnende Geste, und schmiß mit aller

Kraft. Und hörtest du, was der Meyer zu

Rebecca sagte? Ja; und sie schimpfte, und da wollt' er sie schlagen. Das ist ja aber dasselbe, was alle andere sagen; weißt du denn nichts absonderlich über den Fall? Claus

schweigt, und Mendel ist innerlich

mitwühend; so hatte er ihn dennoch

belogen! D welche Tracht Prügel versprach er in seinem Herzen den Schändlichen. Und sagst du, wie Meyer getroffen wurde? fährt

der Richter fort, der im Begriff ist, sich zu

entfernen, wie durch Zufall diese Frage

thut. Neel! meint Claus mit verschämtem Lächeln, er hat ihn ja gar

nicht getroffen. Wie, was, fahreien alle

Umstehende durcheinander. Claus triumphirt; er, er allein hat dieses

Geständnis hervorgerufen; er thut sich wenig darauf zu Gute. Der Richter tritt

dem Knaben einen Schritt näher, und die

Umgebung schweigt von neuem. Höre

Claus, ich verstehe dich nicht recht,

mein Kind! sagte er, du meinst also, der

Mittel, den Knaben getroffen nicht wahr,

Du sagst, wie er ihn warf? Ja! so! und

Claus wiederholt von neuem die

bejagte Bewegung. Und sagst, wie er

Meyers Brust traf. I! Gott bewahre; er

flog ja über Meyers Kopf fort und traf einen jungen Baumstamm. Man denke sich das Erschauern der

Anwesenden bei dieser Antwort Claus

Nischkes. Junge du lägst! fährt

ihn der Richter an und sagt die

Wahrheit, oder ich lasse dich gleich arrestiren. Arrestiren? Man weiß, daß dieses Wort einen sehr unange-

nehmen Eindruck auf Claus Nischke

hervorbringt. Er wird wieder verwirrt, stottert und sagt endlich mit

weinerlicher Stimme: Wenn ich's

aber doch gesehen habe der

Mittelstrog gegen den

Buchstamm und Meyer lag schon

an der Erde. Junge, weißt du welche Strafe Du dich ausgesetzt

sagte der Richter mit barscher

Stimme, wenn Du uns belügst? I mein

Herrgott! entgegnete Claus, der

mir vollständig weint, sehen Sie

doch die Bäche an, da werden sie

schon sehen, was der Knittel angerichtet

hat. Diese Antwort gibt dem

Richter wirklich zu denken; er

sagt einen raschen Entschluß,

und, indem er den

Bürgermeister beauftragt, sich

mit dem Kreisphysikus nach

Kobchow zu begeben, kehrt er

mit seinem Schreiber und dem

Gerichtsdienste wieder nach

Nagibien zurück, um neue

Nachforschungen anzustellen,

nöthigerweise sich selbst nebst

dem jetzt wirklich in

Gewahrsam genommenen

Claus Nischke nach dem Orte,
